

We should have as many different owners of broadcast stations as possible, and it doesn't make any sense to let few people own more stations. I don't think it is in the public's interest to concentrate media ownership in a few hands, making fewer points of view available to the public. I am in complete agreement with commissioners Copps and Adelstein that there should be more opportunity for the public to be educated on this important issue. In my opinion, there should be more widely advertised public hearings, and perhaps congressional hearings, before the FCC takes any action on the question of Broadcast Ownership.
